

Dr. Lisa Orbé-Austin is a licensed psychologist, executive coach, and organizational consultant. Her private practice is located in New York City, where she works with high potential managers and executives. Her organizational work has focused on issues of diversity, equity and inclusion, communication, leadership styles and team cohesion in corporations, higher education institutions, and non-profits. Her views about career management and advancement are regularly sought by the media and she has appeared in various outlets such as The New York Times, Forbes, NBC News, Refinery29 and Insight Into Diversity. Her new book entitled The Impostor Syndrome Workbook (Ulysses Press) will be released in January 2020.

Dr. Orbé-Austin received her Bachelor of Arts degree in English from Boston College, her Master's degree in Counseling Psychology from Boston College and her doctorate from Columbia University in Counseling Psychology.